

Two things worth your attention before you move to building:

- B6 is doing more narrative work than its length suggests — it's the one branch that quietly shifts the tone of everything downstream without announcing it. If you build the app with any ambient audio or color grading, that's the moment to spend a little polish on, since it's invisible in text but should be felt in the browser experience.
- B3 and B5 are one-way doors — once a reader takes them, they lock into their ending rather than looping back. That's intentional (it's what makes E6 and E3 land), but worth double-checking in your eventual state-machine build that those two don't accidentally get "safety net" rejoin logic like the other branches have.
